i paint my toenails

Pink, blue, lavender or sparkles What color should I put on my toes? Under my socks and shoes hiding from everyone except for me I say "bro" and make jokes, out of fear or is it habit If they know the truth, would they still want to talk to me Or act as if I'm a creature or if they will view me differently "how's your girlfriend" or "the girls must swoon over you" And they do but run away when the truth comes out it gets draining having to do this when it comes up All the questions come up again If I just keep quiet will it be easier, but am I lying to myself all over again I did not work 20 years to finally love myself just to feel this way You can do it; you've done it before. It's just two or three words but why is it so scary to say The thoughts come back again 1 2 3... "I'm gay"

Maybe I'll just keep quiet as I paint my toes all over again

the hollering

my hand is cold while walking next to him outside I want to hold his hand in public i want us to be safe though what would people do or say why do they care so much they don't make a deal when people like them do it why is it so different for us just hold his hand, you're literally freezing I grab it but I hear someone yelling, "DUDE THAT'S SO GAY" I yank my hand back, look back it's just some dudes talking to one another laughing my hand is cold while walking next to him outside i'll tuck it in my pocket until we get home, and it will all be just fine

we just wanna have fun

celine taylor whitney cyndi cher charli beyonce xtina britney ariana the queens we look up to and the soundtrack of our youth the one thing that brings us together and creates a strong bond between us we love their confidence, their openness, the heartbreak and the happiness what we all strive for growing up gay is switching from the queens to the "hetero" music like jay z, kendrick, bruce, mj, garth, or willie why can't we like both in all aspects of just music why do we feel like we have to fit into a singular genre even if you like a queen and most the "hetero" music you'll be thrown into another label why can't we just like what we like and carry on with our lives we put our music and lives on shuffle not for you but for ourselves
