ARU 556: REFLECTIVE PRACTICE: A TOOL FOR TEACHING AND LEARNING

July 7 – 10, 2020 Workshop
July 13 – August 7, 2020 Online Class

In this interactive institute, discover ways to use reflective practice as a tool for professional and artistic growth in partnership with your learners. Engage in reflective and artistic encounters aimed at examining how, what and why you teach. Building from sustained reflective journaling, engaged dialog with colleagues and more, participants will explore professional practice in the 21st century. Art teachers lead very busy lives – this four-day institute provides ample opportunities to deeply engage in holistic approaches to wellness. The institute includes an inspirational field trip to Ringing Rocks Park and the Pearl S. Buck House with a few other stops along the way. David Modler, artist, researcher and professor as well as co-author of Journal Junkies and Journal Fodder 365 will engage participants in a half-day workshop on artistic journaling. Dr. Lisa Lucas, educator, instructional coach, consultant, administrator and author of Practicing Presence: Simple Self-Care Strategies for Teachers will engage participants in a conversation filled with ideas and exercises that will enhance focus and engagement in the classroom. It will be a week of renewal and reflection. Participants will leave refreshed. The on-site workshop could be followed by the online class which builds on the work from the institute and further explores reflective practice and teaching and learning.
